- Through this poem the poet shows a miserable picture of the winter season. She worries about the plight of the homeless, innocent children living on the streets and where they would hide from the snow or how they would keep themselves warm with snow and sleet everywhere. She feels that the little ones are most helpless during the winter nights. She feels strongly for the little birds out in the snow especially the young ones who are waiting for their parents to return with food. She wonders how they keep themselves warm in the icy weather, having to battle the cold winds. Winter seems to test the perseverance and patience of both humans and animals alike.
